Description: Clerical, secretarial, and administrative personnel have essential roles in determining the efficiency of the office. Clerical employees make up over a third of white-collar employees in the Federal Government. This program will assist these employees by developing the skills and attitude to effectively perform their mission. Learned skills are improved upon with practice. They result in a striving for excellence and continuing quality interaction provided by participants who transfer knowledge into everyday performance, communication, and on-the-job skills.

Training Objective

- Provide an understanding and ability of participants to acquire the skills needed to increase and enhance their personal level of productivity and effectiveness as a member of their agency work team.
- Present strategies for immediate use toward attaining higher personal achievement by getting more done each day through increased utilization of planning and proper time use.
- Create building blocks to an effective positive attitude and interpersonal communication.
- Help participants identify and improve their personal telephone interactions. Identify the elements of human relations and how to apply them to everyday situations.

- Assist participants in gaining insight and adding polish to the skills needed to produce maximum benefit for them, their boss, and the agency.

The Planning Process

- How to prevent potential problems from occurring
- Skills for more effective planning and scheduling of work
- Tools needed to develop a plan, simple or complex
- Establishing alternative solutions to problems

Understanding Human Relations

- Enhancing agency efficiency and intercommunication
- Using Transactional Analysis to understand human behavior
- Techniques that lead to effective human relations
